Partly as a result of the absence of standardized product, partly because f the difficulty and expense of keepng records, farmers now sell product without accurate knowledge either of its value or its cost to them This ignorance hinders improvement being made in methods of production and tends to destroy the cordial rela-tions which should exist between the country producer and the city dealer. When the producers fall to prosper, they attribute it to the low prices paid by the dealers. The dealers, on the other hand, are apt to regard as ex-tortion every attempt by the produc-ers to raise prices. To remedy this condition, the producers must acquire an accurate knowledge of their cost of production sufficient to enable them to
